WHAT IS A PARAGRAPHE?

A paraphrase conveys the meaning of the quote and attributes it correctly.

WHAT IS A QUOTE?

The APA Publication Manual describes a quote as when you “reproduce word for word material directly from another author’s work” (p. 170), usually between quotation marks. Quoting is great when you find a short statement or exact phrase that supports your paper topic.

Here’s an example of an original source:

"The findings indicate the complex nature of caring for families, and of addressing both their emotional and physical needs whilst caring for critically ill patients. The fundamental conflict that nurses in ICU face balancing professional ideas with being a human in the world has implications for the notion of professionalism, how nurses personally engage in a therapeutic nurse-family relationship, and ultimately the care delivered to families in ICU."

(Citing Sources)

You should always give credit in your paper for any idea that is not your own opinion. If you’re using any idea that isn’t your own, reference it! This not only keeps you safe from plagiarism, but also allows your readers to follow the path of your research.

CITING SOURCES

You should always give credit in your paper for any idea that is not your own opinion. If you’re using any idea that isn’t your own, reference it! This not only keeps you safe from plagiarism, but also allows your readers to follow the path of your research.

MORE INFORMATION

Not sure how to cite a particular source in APA? Check out the IRSC LibGuide for specific directions!

http://irsc.libguides.com/APA